

It seems the spirit of America is to promote personal freedom, and encourage business innovation, and we have government that tries to encourage public discussion on national interest.

It seems counter productive for the government to support any restriction of providing public information - traffic and weather - to a commercial service such as satellite radio. Individuals are capable of selecting which source they want to tune in for information. If satellite want to provide this service - all the better for the citizen that pays for it.

I do not support legislation that restricts public information to a subscriber base, and find no reason why HR 4026 is essential to the broadcast industry - I still tune in to the radio when there is a program that I am interested - and I especially appreciate NPR.
